

Marek Mintal

Beitrag von „PhiladelphiaSOB“ vom 18. Januar 2011, 14:36

Zitat von MaddinXY

It could take some time until he finally decides what to do. He's really a "Clubberer" with heart and soul. You could compare it with Favre leaving Green Bay or something like that. You would get the one player who is more precious to us than all the others combined. Watch out for some super-crazy Club-fans that visit your home games, just to see Mintal. 😊 Still, I think it is the right thing to trade him at the moment. He doesn't fit into our current system, for which he is way too slow, and he wasn't quite the striker he used to be. Don't expect to see a typical "#10"! Mintal is called "The phantom" for a reason. His biggest strength was to appear from out of nowhere and make an unexpected goal.

Too early for me to try my German, so...

If anyone from Germany makes the trip over, be sure to contact the SOB. I'm sure we'd invite you to our tailgate before the game for some beers. Also, we could recommend the best games to attend. Our games have a nice atmosphere. It's not exactly Europe, but it's not a baseball game either. And because we are still a brand new club, winning is secondary for us. We love to win, of course, but simply cheering our team and enjoying the fact that we finally have a team is all we really care about. For now!

Our most popular player is French, this is a Google translation from a French newspaper:

Zitat

How did you adjust to American lifestyle?

For the language it took a little time. But otherwise I love the mentality that prevails here. People are very respectful. They are far ahead of Europe. Everything is different. It made me successful.

Ahead in what subjects?

In mentality. There is a real culture of sport in the United States. People love the show and especially do not complain. They arrive at the stadium to see a show and leave here with stars in their eyes. There is no overflow or fights. It's very respectful.

And now he isn't coming? 